4. Our first action was to ask [] of Olin Mathieson to find out what he could for us. He reported that Colt was undertaking what could be referred to as a developmental production. Winchester was making the barrels for Colt. That it would be weeks before any brochures would be available to him. That Colt was hoping to sell to the Dutch government but was not planning to manufacture overseas.

On this date, [] stated that what he now wanted were three test reports on the Model AR-15; one prepared by Aberdeen, one by the Infantry Board at Fort Benning and the third written by the Combat Development Experimental Center at Fort Ord, California.
